Connect the iPhone to the computer using the USB cable. Then, open iTunes on the computer.Transfer automatically: Select iPhone icon > Music > Sync Music.Transfer manually: Select Summary > Manually manage music and videos. This article explains how to transfer music from a computer to an iPhone. Instructions apply to the iTunes app for PC and Mac. You can also transfer music from one iPhone to another. There are a few things to consider before transferring music to an iPhone. Follow this checklist before proceeding: Install iTunes: Download the latest version from the iTunes page on Apple's site. Keep iTunes up-to-date: Ensure the latest version of iTunes is installed on your computer before plugging in your iPhone. To manually check for updates on a Mac, select the Apple menu, then choose App Store. On a PC, select Help > Check for Updates. Once iTunes is up-to-date, close the program. You can't transfer music from an iPhone to a computer: iTunes only performs a one-way synchronization to an iPhone. It doesn't work both ways. Follow these steps to connect your iPhone to your computer and select it in iTunes. Connect the iPhone to the computer using a USB cable. Launch iTunes. In the upper-left corner of the iTunes window, select the iPhone icon, located to the right of the media menu. The iPhone appears in the left iTunes pane, under the Devices section. Select the triangle next to the device to expand the iPhone entry and select any of the media types. The easiest way to transfer music to the iPhone is by using the automatic sync method. iTunes shows you how much storage space is left on the iPhone. Check the capacity meter at the bottom of the screen. On the iTunes window now showing the device, select the Music menu tab in the left pane. Select Sync Music to enable it. To enable the transfer of all your music, select Entire music library. If you prefer to select only certain songs from your iTunes library, choose Selected playlists, artists, albums, and genres. To specify the playlists, artists, albums, and genres, scroll down and select the media you want to sync. To automatically sync music to the iPhone, select Apply to start the transfer process. If a message appears stating iTunes can sync with only one library at a time, read it carefully so you understand what will happen, then select Sync and Replace. If you don't want iTunes to automatically transfer music to your iPhone, it's possible to configure the program for manual syncing. This method offers more control over which of your iTunes media you want on your iPhone. Near the top of the main iTunes screen, select Summary in the left panel. Select Manually manage music and videos to enable this mode. Select Apply to save the settings. Select the back arrow at the top of iTunes and locate the Library section in the left pane. Select Songs. You can also select Albums, Artists or Genres. Drag and drop songs from the main iTunes window to the left pane where the phone is listed. If you have several songs you want to sync at once, press and hold Ctrl or Command and then select each song. As an alternative to manually dragging songs to your iPhone, use iTunes playlists. These are easy to set up and save time when syncing. If you previously created iTunes playlists you want to sync to the iPhone, drag and drop the playlists onto the iPhone icon in the left pane. FAQ How do I transfer music from iPhone to Android? To transfer music from iPhone to Android, launch iTunes on the PC, select the music you want to transfer, and add it to a new folder on the PC. Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why! (Pocket-lint) · There are a number of Android pieces waiting to fall into place and this leaked, but working, Music app seems to fit perfectly into the middle of that puzzle. The app has the look and feel of the Honeycomb music player, using the same icon and essentially offering the same New and Recent view that lets you flick through your album art, a little like Apple's Cover Flow. Let's be honest, the stock Android music player is pretty bland, really only offering up listings and playback, and Music 3.0 doesn't extend too much further than that. You can sort and search music by the normal categories and you get the Now Playing bar at the bottom of most list-based pages, or an icon in the top right-hand corner in the New and Recent view. When a song is playing you get a little animated meter on the right-hand side, a drop-down menu offering options, like adding to a playlist. Best iPhone apps 2022: The ultimate guide By Maggie Tillman · 30 April 2022 These are the absolute best iPhone apps available right now, from productivity apps to apps for traveling, reading, listening to music, and more. But the interesting thing here is the Settings menu. This will let you add a streamed music account and offers a range of settings to control how streamed music is handled. At the moment you click on the option to add an account and head through to a blank screen and there doesn't seem to be any way to populate this section of the app. Pocket-lint The other options offer up cache settings, Wi-Fi only settings and a download queue. The Help option at the bottom of the page doesn't offer up and suggestions, just taking you to a webpage that currently doesn't exist. Assuming this is a legitimate leak - rather than just an enthusiastic fan's recreation of the Honeycomb app on Gingerbread - it seems to fit into other nuggets of information we've heard about Google addressing Music in the future. It's not certain whether the option to select an account means you'll be able to choose from different streaming music services, or if it just lets you select the Google account to access music you have stored with Google, rather like the Amazon Cloud service. Moving the music player for phones closer to the tablet version also fits in with Google ascertaining that the two strands of Android would come together. This certainly looks to bring a uniformity to the mobile operating system, and we guess the option would roll out to Honeycomb in an update. Pocket-lint The app is unstable at the moment, so we don't recommend you use it as your main player - we installed in on the Sony Ericsson Xperia Arc without any problems, but it is a little delicate and will crash if you try to access certain menus whilst playing music - an option to access "sound effects" crashed the player every time we tried to take a look. Music v3 brings with it a basic playback widget, integration into your notification bar (but doesn't offer any playback controls here) and doesn't offer you any lock screen playback either. The app come courtesy of Droid Life, where you can download it for yourself, after seeing the story first appear when a test version of Android Market landed in the laps of Tech From 10. Writing by Chris Hall. Ben Stockton / How-To Geek iTunes may be dead on macOS, but it's still alive and kicking on Windows. Migrating away from iTunes is recommended, but if you still want to sync your existing iTunes music collection with Android, you can by following these steps. You have a few options to choose from. You can use the Apple Music app on Android, transfer your files manually, or use third-party apps like doubleTwist Sync to keep your music collection correctly synced. Transfer iTunes Music to Android Using Apple Music With Apple's focus now on Apple Music, iTunes is being left behind. There isn't an iTunes app for Android, but Apple does offer an Apple Music app on Android devices. You can sync your iTunes music collection to Android using the Apple Music app. You just have to ensure that iTunes on your PC and the Apple Music app are both signed in using the same Apple ID. You also need to be a current Apple Music subscriber. Start by opening iTunes on your PC and clicking Edit > Preferences. In the "General" tab, make sure the option for "iCloud Music Library" is enabled and then click "OK" to confirm. If you need to manually begin syncing songs to your iCloud storage, click File > Library > Update iCloud Music Library. You may need to allow some time for your entire library to sync to iCloud. Unfortunately, iTunes doesn't have an obvious progress bar showing how long it takes for this process to complete. Once your iTunes library is fully synced to iCloud, open the Apple Music app on Android and tap the "Library" tab at the bottom. Your iTunes music collection will be listed here. Tap one of the relevant tabs such as "Artists" or "Songs." Press on one of the songs or artists to begin playing your music. If you want your music available for offline playback, press the download icon in the "Songs" tab or in individual "Album" listings. Manually Copy Your Music Files from iTunes to Android Unfortunately, Android doesn't fit well into the Apple ecosystem. While iTunes will sync music files to iOS and iPadOS devices, it won't do the same with Android devices. You'll need to manually copy your music library to Android instead. RELATED: How to Copy Music to Your Android Phone There are plenty of methods for doing this, including transferring files over a direct USB connection between your PC and Android, by using cloud storage like Google Drive, or by using a flash drive with a suitable USB OTG adapter. If you're transferring your iTunes music to Android over a direct USB connection, and assuming your iTunes music is being held in the default iTunes music folder, open Windows File Explorer and head to the "C:\Users\%Music%\iTunes\iTunes Media\" folder. Replace with your user account folder. From here, select the folders carrying your music files and then right-click and hit "Copy" or press Ctrl+C. View your Android device in Windows File Explorer. Choose a suitable location on your device and then paste your copied iTunes folders to that location by pressing Ctrl+V on your keyboard or right-clicking and selecting the "Paste" button. Once copied, use a third-party Android music app to play your music collection on your Android device. Transfer Your Music Using doubleTwist Sync If you're looking for an easier method to transfer music files between iTunes and Android, an alternative to manual file transfer is doubleTwist Sync. This software for Windows bridges the gap between Android and iTunes. It lets you sync your music collection between Android devices and iTunes in both directions. Now music files on your Android device will sync to iTunes and vice versa. It will also work over Wi-Fi, allowing you to transfer your music files without needing a direct USB connection. Start by downloading and installing the doubleTwist software to your PC. Once you open doubleTwist Sync, you'll be asked to connect your device over USB or use the AirSync app to connect over WiFi. AirSync isn't free, so the cheapest method is to connect your device using USB. Once you connect your Android device, doubleTwist will display used and available space on your device. Click the "Music" tab on the top menu. If you want to sync files from iTunes to Android, click the "Sync Music" checkbox. You'll also need to click the checkboxes for the listed subcategories, including "Albums" and "Artists." If you also want to sync files from Android back to iTunes, click the "Import New Music and Playlists" checkbox. When you're ready to begin syncing your files, click the "Sync Now" button. Your iTunes music files will begin transferring to your Android device, while any missing music files on your Android device will transfer to your PC to join the rest of your iTunes collection. Once this process is complete, you can then begin playing your music on both your PC and your Android device using a suitable music playback app. Google Play Music and YouTube Music We've recommended Google Play Music in the past as an option for copying music to Android. Unfortunately, YouTube Music is now the default music app on Android devices, with Google Play Music soon to be discontinued. With that in mind, we no longer recommend you use the Google Play Music Manager as a way of migrating your music files from your PC to Android. At present, YouTube Music doesn't come with a Google Play Music Manager equivalent. If you want to manually sync your iTunes collection to Android, it's better to use the Apple Music app, transfer your files manually, or use a third-party method like doubleTwist instead.
